An Efficient Remedy

In all cases of Bronchial and Pulmonary Affections is AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL. As such it is recognized and prescribed by the medical profession, and in many thousands of families, for the past forty years, it has been regarded as an invaluable household remedy. It is a preparation that only requires to be taken in very small quantities, and a few doses of it administered in the early stages of a cold or cough will effect a speedy cure, and make very possible, save life. There is no doubt whatever that

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral

Has preserved the lives of great numbers of persons, by arresting the development of Laryngitis, Bronchitis, Pneumonia, and Pulmonary Consumption, and by the cure of those dangerous maladies. It should be kept ready for use in every family where there are children, as it is a medicine far superior to all others in the treatment of Croup, the alleviation of Whooping Cough, and the cure of Colds and Influenza, ailments peculiarly incidental to childhood and youth. Prompt attitude in dealing with all diseases of this class is of the utmost importance. The loss of a single day may, in many cases, entail fatal consequences. Do not waste precious time in experimenting with medicines of doubtful efficacy, while the malady is constantly gaining a deeper hold, but take at once the speediest and most certain to cure,

LIFE IN AUSTRALIA.

CHAPTER VII.

A NARROW ESCAPE.

Three weeks had elapsed since Philip Bathurst had joined the motley crowd at the diggings, and fortune had not been unkind to him.

All day he worked, and in the night built castles for the future, wherein Flo played the principal part. But for Mark's death, never would digger have been more jolly.

When a man is in that humor he generally craves for a confidant, as far as he could Philip made the Jew one. Isaac Lewis had seemed to take a special liking to the young fellow, or rather to rely upon his youth, strength, and generous nature. Philip's was not the nature to refuse anyone help that he could give, so when the Jew, half apologetically, announced his desire to rear his little tent by the young fellow's, Philip lent him a hand.

He compassionated him also for his infirmity of deafness, which was so great that it isolated him from all, for no one paid heed save Philip to "Deaf Old Clo," the nickname bestowed on him, as with stooped form he slunk about the diggings.

"You are unfortunate in your claims," remarked Philip Bathurst one day to the Jew; "and so you ever will be, Lewis, if you don't stick to one with more perseverance. No sooner do you get a foot below the surface than you give it up and go elsewhere."

"Elsewere. Yes, yes—he—he," nodded the Jew. "You shall see, Mishter Bathurst. He—he—he! only vait and I shall be as rich as I vants. There ish good sterling gold to be found, and I shall find it. He—he—he!"

As he went the Jew ceased wacking, and looked after him, a strange expression in his bright eyes. Then shouldering his own pick he went off in another direction, finally pitching upon the other piece of land, and sending his pick into it with wonderful vigor.

Near the spot were two diggers in high boots and garibaldi, lying near their claim, drinking and talking earnestly. At the sound of the pick, one clanged round.

"It's only 'Old Clo,'" laughed the other. "If any chap was a disgrace to his tribe it's him. I thought Jew's noses could smell a mile off."

"I reckon he's got a tile loose. He's always digging where there ain't a bit of chance, and where there is he leaves it. But hadn't we better move our quarters?"

"'Cause of him? Why, he'd hardly hear a gun let off close at his ear. You see," raising his voice he called:—"Deaf old Clo, you won't git much out of that claim, it's been worked."

"You see he count's for nothing, so now, what was I saying?"

And the two men resumed their conversation.

* * * * * * * *

Philip Bathurst had a glorious end that day, almost the biggest nugget the diggings had produced.

Others had witnessed his good luck, and the intelligence ran through the camp.

Flushed and delighted he gave over work at dusk, and returned to his tent.

Time never hung heavily on his hands. In the breast-pocket of his garibaldi were three letters from Flo, and no occupation was so sweet and interesting as the re-perusal of these.

His candle lighted, he employed some of his time in reckoning up his gains. They almost exceeded his hopes.

"If matters go on like this," he reflected, "in less than another month I may get the colonel to purchase me a station, and—and soon after that"—with a thrill of delicious joy—"I may make Flo, my sweet darling Flo—my wife. It's very jolly working for her; but it will be far more so when I have her by my side, her dear head on my breast, and her eyes—Heaven bless them!—shyly, yet fondly, meeting mine. Ah, to work—work, for every hour I bring that time nearer is an extra hour of paradise.

So in order to be up at dawn he put out the light and threw himself on his rough bed, and, healthfully tired, speedily slept.

Silence had scarcely fallen over the camp when the opening of Isaac Lewis's tent was slightly raised, and the Jew crept forth. Keeping in the shadow, he crawled to the darkest side of Philip Bathurst's tent, drew out his knife, made a deep rent in the canvas, and pulled himself through.

The young man's breathing told where he laid, the Jew stole along to his side, then quickly placed one hand on his shoulder, and one on his mouth, while he whispered as, Philip sprang up:

"Hush, not a word for your life! I'm Lewish. There'sh to be an attack on your tent to-night."

"By whom?" exclaimed Philip.

"Get up and dress; have your pishtols ready."

"Is it any of the diggers, Isaac?" queried Philip, as he obeyed. "Tut! he cannot hear me, and I dare not raise my voice. It's to steal my nugget."

A moment a suspicion of the Jew himself flashed across his mind, but he banished it as he completed his dressing.

"Are you ready?" whispered the Jew; "if sho, come outshide and vatch.—They will shoon be here."

Wondering who "they" could be, Philip approached the door, when Isaac Lewis drew him back.

"No, no. They vill shee you. This vay; there ish shadows. The vay I got in."

"And a remarkably cool way, too," reflected the young fellow; nevertheless, dropping on hands and knees, and following the Jew.

"If we are shtill, we vill catch 'em," whispered Isaac. "We vill unmask 'em; they shall not escape. He, he, he."

Even as he spoke, a blue thread of light, as that which betrays a powder-train, darted from the direction of the Jew's tent to Philip's, entering it at the part where his bed was.

There was a loud explosion, a glare of light, and the tent was hurled into fragments.

Philip and Lewis were flung to the ground from the concussion, but swiftly they sprang to their feet, and in the glare of the blazing tent came almost face to face with two rough diggers who were advancing rapidly.

"That's 'em," cried the Jew. "Seize 'em, they mushn't escape."

The villains had, however, already leaped back; as one did so, he aimed his revolver and fired.

Philip Bathurst gave a leap in the air and fell with a groan to the ground.

Isaac Lewis, uttering almost a howl of rage, sprang forward, discharging his revolver barrels after the diggers, apparently without effect, for they never stopped in their flight, and speedily were lost in the darkness.

The Jew did not pursue. Instead, with every indication of sorrow, he flung himself down by Philip Bathurst. Eagerly by the light of the flames he examined his face, then felt his pulse.

No, he was not dead. But he must have aid at once.

The bullet had struck him low down near the heart.

Help was readily given, for the explosion and pistol reports had speedily collected a crowd of diggers, who began extinguishing the flames.

To one cause alone could be attributed the attack—robbery, and one of the laws among the respectable diggers is mutual protection. Thus a guard was instantly formed to protect Philip's property, while he, still insensible, was borne to a neighboring tent.

The wound proved of a far less dangerous character than the Jew had imagined. Indeed, it was not serious, though Philip Bathurst must give up gold-digging for some time. Isaac Lewis at once constituted himself his nurse, taking his place by his bedside.

It was near dawn when Philip, his senses clearer, said, regarding the Jew fixedly:

"Isaac, I owe my life to you. But for you I must have fallen a victim to those scoundrels' plans to blow me into fragments. Yet I am in a fog. Tell me——"

"Nothing," interrupted the Jew, with a quick glance round at the other occupants of the tent. "You must not talk, but shleep. Vait, Mishter Bathurst; ven you are better you may spheak." The words were accompanied by a meaning glance.

Perforce Philip had to obey; but no sooner did those who had given him shelter depart for their day's work, than he exclaimed:

"Now, Isaac, may I speak?"

"Yesh. I vill answer."

They talked for a long time, indeed, until they were interrupted.

"And you have no definite proof as to who these men are, though you suspect?" asked Philip.

"No," replied the Jew. "But—hush!" he hastily interrupted himself. "Somebody ish coming."

It was the third day after the attack, and Philip was growing restless under confinement, when Isaac brought him a letter that had been sent on by the colonel. He instantly recognized the writing of the Bathursts' solicitor, with whom he had kept up communication. Eagerly he tore it open, and read these brief sentences:

"MY DEAR MR. PHILIP:—Your uncle has had a fit, and is much troubled. He has for the first time made inquiry respecting you. The doctor says it is doubtful if he can live six months. Come here at once; you ought not to be so far away. From what I can judge, I am sure he is softening toward you. Come, in haste, mail just starting, yours faithfully,

"EDWARD LAURIE."

"Isaac," exclaimed Philip, rising up, "wound or no, I must get back to Shady Creek, and from thence to England."

"England!"

"Yes, my uncle is ill. The solicitor recalls me. I must lose no time. Pray procure me a horse. My gold I will leave in your care."

"Your gold you will take with you," answered the Jew. "If you are fit to travel you are not fit to do so alone. I shall go too."

Philip grasped his hand.

"You are a friend indeed," he ejaculated.

He had soon everything prepared, but so secretly that none but two or three knew of the projected departure for the Jew said, as they had failed to secure the villains who had fired the tent, they might, for all they knew, be hovering somewhere in the ranges, and might lie in ambush for the two.

Thus, at about midnight, when all was still, and the moon only beginning to throw silvery lines down the hillside, Philip Bathurst quitted the camp, proceeding to a clump of trees by the river, where Isaac Lewis waited with the loaded horses.

Before dawn they were far on their way to Shady Creek.

There are few medicines as efficacious as good news.

Philip, in the thought of again seeing Flo, felt little of his wound. Besides, how bright, possibly, now was his future. It must not be imagined that he, even remotely, rejoiced that his uncle's days were numbered. He, indeed, prayed that they were not; but, if he would only once more acknowledge him as his heir, then there would be no need to dig up a fortune before Colonel Grainger would consent to his marriage with his niece.

After he had won her pity, and his rival had departed, he had been a frequent guest at the station.

His manner, however, had been so respectful and unobtrusive, that any awkwardness Flo had felt soon wore off, and she experienced for him a greater regard than she had ever done before.

Herbert Archer was not slow to perceive this and to work upon it, taking care to make her fearless in his presence under the belief that he had conquered that love which, in truth, was consuming him as a furnace the receptacle in which it burns.

Even at the present moment wild and thoughts passed through his brain of seizing her in his arms, carrying her to where his horse stood at the gate, and escaping into the bush.

"Better wait for Mat," he said mentally; "he'll do the work safest out there, if he hasn't done it already, and my cursed rival put in a claim, none will care to dispute, to six foot of earth."

At that very moment Mrs. Crane, throwing her head up, and holding her needle high to thread it, exclaimed:

"Flo, see on the hill yonder; are not those visitors coming to the station?"

"They are two horsemen coming this way, auntie; but whether especially visitors I cannot say."

"They are riding fast," put in Herbert Archer, as Flo, rising, stood by his side.

"If we are shtill, we vill catch 'em," whispered Isaac. "Ve vill unmask 'em; they shall not escape. He, he, he."

Even as he spoke, a blue thread of light, as that which betrays a powder-train, darted from the direction of the Jew's tent to Philip's, entering it at the part where his bed was.

With the interest of those who live in solitary bush stations, the three watched the two rapidly approaching.

Suddenly, almost instantaneously, a change came over the features of Flo and Herbert Archer; both of surprise, but one of joy, the other of fury.—Eagerly the girl leaned forward, and then cried:

"It is! it is! Oh, it is, auntie. See, he is waving his hat. It is Philip, Mat is behind him."

Not waiting for their reply; light as a bird, she ran from the verandah to the gate.

"It is he, curse him!" muttered Herbert Archer between his teeth; then with a bitter smile he added, "I will say good-morning, Mrs. Crane; I feel I should be de trop at this happy meeting."

"Poor young man," reflected Aunt Crane. "And he'd have been the man for my money. So noble, and has taken his disappointment so well."

"Miss Grainger," he said, in a low tone, "you will pardon my going. I could not bear to see you meet."

She had no words to speak, but extended her hand with a glance of compassionate kindness. He took it, and, bending, touched his lips to it.

"I would give all I possess—nay, life itself," he exclaimed, fervently, "to be Philip Bathurst at this moment."

Then he rode quickly off down the road, a dark frown on his face as he muttered:

"What does Mat mean by having let this man return here alive? Confound him he shall answer to me for this."

"Philip!"

"My darling!"

That was for a moment all they said, as he clasped her to his heart, Isaac Lewis having taken the horses round to the stable. Then consternation came into her eyes as she exclaimed:

"But, oh, my Philip, you are ill. Your face is pale and thin."

"My darling," he laughed gaily, "no man can be ill who feels the happiest being in creation. Even were I dying, I feel one glance of your sweet countenance would bring back life."

"Ah, Philip, you cannot deceive me. You are ill. If not, why have you returned so unexpectedly?"

"Flo, dearest, I come because I have news—great news. I have to start for England at once."

"England!" and the color yet further faded from her cheek.

"Yes, love. Don't look frightened, for the only obstacle to our union, Flo, I trust now will be speedily removed. Ah, here comes the colonel. Let us join him, then I will tell you all."

The "all" was speedily told, and listened to by the hearers with different feeling. Flo forgot everything but the attack and the danger Philip had run. She nestled closer to his side, as if, while there, no further harm could reach him.

The colonel, a soldier who had himself been more than once wounded, thought only of the chance of Philip's being reinstated in his uncle's favor.

"Quite right, my boy," he exclaimed. "You must not delay. You must go at once. Where's the last paper from Sydney. Here it is. The Clan Buchanan starts for England on the twentieth. If you go by that, which you ought to, you should leave here to-morrow. Are you strong enough?"

"Oh, no," murmured Flo.

"Yes, colonel," replied Philip, smiling, "a day and night's rest will set me up again."

"That a night, and the rest you shall have. Kate and I will see to your preparations, so don't you worry."

With a consideration that showed he had not forgotten his own young days, the colonel took care that Flo and Philip should have much of the time to themselves, while it was very blissful to Philip to be waited on by so sweet a nurse, for Flo persisted in his taking the rest which he really much needed on the sofa, while she attended to him, or sat side by side, hand clasped in hand, eyes fixed on eyes, often lips pressed to lips.

"Philip," said Flo, "I tremble at your going, and yet I know you must."

"Indeed I must. But how short, love, will be our parting in comparison to our first."

"Yes; but what may not happen in a short time? Even at the goldfields you would have been killed but for that gold Lewis."

"Truly yes; but, love, the kind fortune which brought us together, preserved me then. Let us trust it will continue to preserve both of us, for do not you imagine I feel anxiety for dangers you may run here, as you for me in my voyage?"

"I run dangers?" she smiled; "that is not likely. But the sea——"

"The sea," he laughed; "think of the thousands of ships upon it, and the few that harm comes to. But, at any rate, do not let us waste these happy moments by gloomy forebodings."

"That's my idea," remarked the colonel, stepping into the darkening room, "so let us have lights and a merry evening."

Before the lights were brought, Philip drew his betrothed to his heart, and as he kissed her white forehead, whispered:

"Darling, you will not be low-spirited, for my sake."

"For yours, I promise, Philip, and I ask the same from you."

"My wife," he whispered, and never had they felt how deep and unswerving was their affection as at that moment.

The next morning Philip started, the colonel bearing him company part of the way.

Isaac Lewis was among those who saw him off. Flo had taken a particular liking to him for the service he had rendered Philip, and the Jew had promised to remain while at the station before returning to the diggings.

"As Philip Bathurst shook his hand in parting, bending, he whispered, hurriedly:

"I go without fear, for I trust in you."

"You may," nodded the Jew; then, with a respectful salutation, stepped quickly back.

CHAPTER VIII.

A MESSAGE FROM THE QUEEN.

"Goodness gracious me, what is that?" ejaculated Mrs. Crane, straightening her form, which had been bent over a flower-bed.

A piercing scream, brief, but full of suffering, had rung abruptly through the station; then all was silent.

"Gracious! it must be Flo. Whatever is the matter?"

Quickly she hastened to the room where she had left her niece. Entering, she found Colonel Grainger kneeling on the floor, the young girl resting in his arms, pale, motionless, as though dead.

"Kate," he exclaimed in consternation, as his sister appeared, "what is the meaning of this? What is it?"

"I don't know, brother. I left the poor child quite well. Dear, dear!"

"Did you hear her cry?" he asked.

"I did, and came at once. Oh, Flo, Flo, speak, dear," cried the old lady. "Tell us what it is, my darling. How like death she looks. Lift her on the sofa, brother."

As the colonel prepared to do so, he perceived a newspaper half hidden beneath the young girl's dress.

"This can't have been the cause," he exclaimed, seizing it. "It came to me this morning, sent by whom I can't tell, for I hadn't time to look, I was so busy. I asked Flo to send it through, to see if there was anything, and let me know at dinner. No, it couldn't have been this."

With a nervous dread that it "was this," while speaking, the colonel had been hurriedly running his eyes over the columns of the local paper.

He had not to look far. There was the truth—the terrible truth—in the largest, blackest type.

"Shipwreck of the Australian ship, the Clan Buchanan. Loss of 270 lives. The coxswain alone saved."

"Great Heavens," cried the colonel, "that she should have seen it at first! The blow may kill her. Who—who could have been the confounded friend to send the intelligence in this way?"

"What intelligence, brother? Oh, do speak."

"That the Clan Buchanan had foundered in the South Atlantic, and—and Philip Bathurst, poor lad!"—the colonel's voice trembled—"is drowned with the rest. My darling, pray Heaven to give you strength to bear this."

Stooping, he pressed his lips to her cold forehead, while two tears stood in his eyes.

Would she bear it? Would she survive it?"

They were the two questions speedily asked by all at Shady Creek, where poor Flo lay delirious at times, calling upon Philip to return, at others to save her from the fearful waves she imagined were rushing forward to overwhelm her.

But finally youth triumphed, and after a week's prostration Flo came slowly back to consciousness, and, as it were, to life.

"Uncle," she said, in a low tone, retaining his hand as he was gently arranging her pillows, "tell me, is there any hope that Philip might——"

She could not speak the word. The officer would have gladly given hope, but as he looked into her large, wistful eyes he saw it would be a cruel kindness to do so."

"No, Flo dear," he rejoined sadly. "Bear it, my darling, like the brave Christian girl you are. Remember how many mourn with you."

"Still, I remember," falteringly, "there was one saved, uncle."

"The coxswain, a young, strong athlete, and a vigorous swimmer. The ship foundered, and all perished save him."

Flo turned away her face awhile, then, without looking round, said, in a low tone:

"Uncle, tell me all about it; then—then I hope no one will mention it again, for—for I cannot bear it. But I must know how it happened."

The colonel made his story as brief as he was able to.

The Clan Buchanan had had a fair voyage until nearing the equator, when it was struck by a tempest of a cyclone description. For a time the ship was despaired of, but finally the hurricane had abated, and the crew and passengers were rejoicing with light and grateful hearts over their escape from death when the heavy roll of the vessel informed the practised seamen that a new danger threatened. A leak had been sprung and the hold was rapidly filling. Men were ordered to the pumps, but it was futile.

Already the ship was water-logged. Worse still, the storm had damaged all the boats. The carpenter had been summoned to make the least injured serviceable, when, with a sudden, unexpected roll, the Clan Buchanan had pitched forward, and as the moon broke out clear and calm over the yet ruffled waters, foundered with all hands.

Of the latter, fifty-seven, a young giant in height and muscle, fought his way to the surface, and, after keeping afloat for nearly an hour, was picked up by a ship that had only come a little better out of the tempest than the Clan Buchanan.

That was the story brought by an outward-bound vessel to Australia. When death closes the scene no further bulletins are necessary; there is no hope for those who drown in mid-Atlantic.

Flo knew it, and the resignation that is the result of utter hopelessness fell upon her. She had no tears—her grief was too deep; but she resumed her usual occupations, moving about the station, calm, but the shadow of her former self.

"It will be her death-blow," remarked the colonel with emotion.

"Without she is roused," replied his sister. "If only another affection could take the place of this——"

"Another affection!" cried the colonel, indignantly. "What do you take her for? I'd hold that girl worthless, Kate, who, on the death of one lover, could readily accept another in his place."

And the colonel confessed that so it seemed, for once more Herbert Archer became a constant guest at Shady Creek; never, however, intruding upon Flo, but regulating his behavior with so deep and compassionate a sympathy, that it won both her gratitude and esteem.

"It is the thin edge of the wedge," he muttered one day on taking his leave, "but I'll wait for one or three months to overcome her grief for that fellow before I again try her. If she still refuse me, then— What the deuce are you sneaking about me for?" he demanded angrily aloud, as Isaac Lewis's stooped figure emerged from some bushes close by.

"Eh? Yes; fine day; very fine, Mishter Archer," replied the Jew, his hand to his ear as he moved past.

Isaac Lewis had been absent from the station when the news arrived of the foundering of the Clan Buchanan. How he had received the intelligence none knew, but on his return he had apparently devoted himself to Flo, who, owing to his having saved Philip's life, had taken a great liking to him.

What the Jew did no one inquired; he was sometimes whole days absent; but he was ever welcomed back. It was believed that he was not quite right in the head, as well as being deaf.

Shortly after this, Herbert Archer, who had been to Sydney, rode rapidly up to Shady Creek, and flinging his reins over the gate-post, came in haste towards the room where the family usually sat.

"Uncle!" exclaimed Flo, rising, her pale cheek flushing, her manner excited; "Mr. Archer brings some news, I am sure of it. See, he has a paper in his hand, and—and I feel he would not be the bearer of bad."

"My love, what news could he bring?"

"I do not know; but wait."

"Well, Archer," remarked the colonel, meeting him, "we thought you were in Sydney."

"I have just returned from there, colonel, a day earlier than I intended, for I bring papers, perhaps, something that may please Miss Grainger."

"Yes; a message from the Queen; a word of sympathy from her Majesty to the relatives and friends of those who were in the Cambria Freeman.

EBENSBURG, PA.,
FRIDAY, - - MAY 14, 1886.

IN the British House of Commons on Monday last Mr. Gladstone moved the second reading of the Home Rule bill. He said he did not intend at present to ask the House to continue the debate on the bill from day to day, and further debate on the measure was postponed until next Monday.

A shin-kicking match for the championship of America and $500 took place one day last week at Southport, a few miles from New York. One of the contestants had established his reputation as the champion of Scranton, in this State, and in three short rounds won the proud title of national shin-kicking champion and the $500. What is this land of the free and the home of the brave coming to, any way?

THE aggregate loss sustained by the employes and employers by the late strike on Jay Gould's Missouri Pacific railroad, was the subject of inquiry on Monday last by the Congressional Investigating Committee which is in session at St. Louis. William Kerrigan, General Superintendent of the Missouri Pacific system, who was examined by the Committee, estimated the loss to the employees of the road to be, in round numbers, one million of dollars; the loss to the railroad, two millions, and the loss to the country at large two or three times this amount.

THE St. James Gazette, a London Tory paper, declares that the originators of the meeting held at the Academy of Music, in New York, on Friday night last, to express approval of Mr. Gladstone's efforts to extend home rule to Ireland, "were rebels, outlaws and supporters of aliens." The English Tories of 1776 said the same thing about the people of this country when in their public assemblies they denounced British tyranny and oppression, and expressed their determination to take up arms in defence of their right to govern themselves. No English Tory ever had much love for self-government. Perhaps the Tory editor of the Gazette didn't like the summary way in which O'Donovan Rossa was disposed of at the New York meeting.

THERE is to be a Presidential election in November 1888 and John A. Logan who, after his defeat along with Blaine in 1884, made up his mind to be a candidate next time for the first place on the ticket against Blaine and all other aspirants, is determined to work the pension business for all it is worth as a means by which he can solidify the soldier vote throughout the country in his behalf. His first effort in that direction was made in the Senate on Friday last, when he introduced a pension bill which proposes to extend and increase the pensions of all classes, and which, if passed, would take from the Treasury between three and four hundred millions of dollars. Logan's strength in the Western States is quite formidable and as he is determined to capture the next Republican National Convention, the prospect is assuring for the most lively, if not bitter contest that has been witnessed for many a day

GOVERNOR OGLESBY, of Illinois, has received a letter from John A. Gill, of Pekin, in that State, who served in an Illinois regiment in the Mexican war, stating that he has in his possession a cork leg which was worn by Santa Ana and left by him in his carriage when he escaped after the battle of Cerro Gordo, and offering to present it to the State to be placed in Memorial Hall at Springfield. Governor Oglesby accepted the offer and requested Mr. Gill to forward the leg. That Santa Ana left his wooden leg behind him at the battle referred to is a well attested fact, but whether Gill's donation is the original Jacob or not might admit of serious doubt if not well authenticated. It will answer the purpose, however, if it is believed that it is.

AN immense meeting to express sympathy with Gladstone and Parnell was held at the New York Academy of Music on last Friday night. Governor Hill came down from Albany and acted as President of the meeting. O'Donovan Rossa made his appearance in the hall and attempted to exploit his well known views about dynamite and the "resources of civilization," but the Governor, amidst the applause of all who were present shut him off and compelled him to resume his seat. Mr. Tilden, who was unable to be present, sent the following letter which was read at the meeting:

"I cordially and earnestly concur with you in desiring to give the most imposing expression of approval, admiration and applause with which America regards the magnificent effort of the English Premier to crown his career of illustrious services to mankind by giving the blessings of home rule to the long misgoverned people of Ireland. Next to the renowned Gladstone, the meed of gratitude is due to Parnell for so signal an advance of the cause of local self-government among mankind.

THE people of the State of New York will not be permitted at the next November election to vote on an amendment to the Constitution prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors, that measure having been defeated last week in the lower branch of the Legislature, which is strongly Republican, all the Democrats and eighteen Republicans voting against it. At the Republican convention in that State last year, one of the resolutions in the platform pledged the Republicans to pass such an amendment if they succeeded in carrying the Legislature. They did carry it and the pledge has turned out to be not worth the paper on which it was written. In many doubtful counties in the State the Prohibitionists, relying upon the pledge, refused last fall to nominate candidates of their own and voted for the Republican nominees, in many instances electing them, and they now declare that they will not be caught in the same trap again. It is not therefore probable that a Republican Legislature will be elected in that State at the next November election.

THE RIVER AND HARBOR bill passed the House yesterday week by a vote of 143 ayes to 102 nays. Nine of the members from this State, seven Republicans and two Democrats, voted for it, and fourteen members, nine Republicans and five Democrats, voted against it. The other five members were either absent or declined to vote. Mr. Campbell, of this district, voted against the bill. The job amounts to something over fifteen millions of dollars. The River and Harbor bill of 1882 which was passed by the same system of log-rolling which put the present bill through, appropriated three million of dollars more than the one which has now passed the House, was vetoed by Mr. Arthur and then passed by a two-thirds vote over the veto. The passage of that outrageous measure by a Republican House caused the next House to be Democratic, and if any party suffers at the next November election in consequence of the present bill, it will not likely be the Republican party. Eighty-seven Democrats and fifty-six Republicans voted in the affirmative. As it goes from the house to the Senate the bill is eight or ten millions of dollars larger than it ought to be, and the chances are that the Republicans in the Senate will add a couple of millions to it. Mr. Cleveland was elected on a platform pledging the Democratic party to retrenchment and reform, and as it has a majority of over forty in the House, it is very apparent that a blunder was committed by the Democrats when they allowed the bill to pass in its present objectionable shape. What the President will do when the bill reaches him cannot now be foreseen, but it may safely be stated that he will not falter in the performance of what he believes to be his duty to the taxpayers of the country.

JEFFERSON DAVIS recently visited several places in Alabama and Georgia and was everywhere received with great enthusiasm, from which the Republican papers at the North predict another rebellion, but just what the imaginary rebels of Jefferson Davis propose to do, the editors of the journals referred to don't seem to know. That Jefferson Davis should be enthusiastically received by a Southern crowd in a Southern town, is the most natural thing in the world. It would be a most singular circumstance if it were otherwise, As President of the Confederate States he played a most conspicuous part in the greatest and most stupendous conflict of arms that the world ever saw, before which the mightiest battles of Napoleon, the greatest of modern warriors, sink into comparative insignificance. The Southern people believed that for an adequate cause a State had the right to secede or go out of the Union, and Davis represented that idea and advocated it when he was in the U. S. Senate. If they had not believed in the right of secession they would never have carried on a four years' bloody war to maintain it. How natural then it is that they should now honor Davis, not as their leader in a future rebellion which is altogether visionary and not thought of, but as the representative of a "Lost Cause," to vindicate which they sacrificed so much blood and treasure. The Southern people of to-day are wedded to the Union, and would defend it against all assaults, come from what quarter they may. The Atlanta Constitution, which is a representative Southern journal, in speaking of the demonstrations in honor of Davis during his Alabama and Georgia tour, truly expresses the sentiments of the Southern people when it says:

"So far as the Constitution is concerned, it indorses every phase of the the Davis demonstrations, because it understands precisely what those demonstrations meant. But if those demonstrations meant any possible secession, or even suggested the remotest desire to dissolve the Union, the Constitution would withhold its indorsement. For we believe in the Union and the Constitution, in the perpetuity of the Government and the unity of the Republic, and there are not ten sane men in the South who believe otherwise."

WHEN the State Senate of Ohio met in January last its thirty-seven members consisted of 20 Democrats and 17 Republicans. Four of the Democratic members represented Cincinnati and their seats were contested by their four Republican opponents on the ground that their majorities, which were small, were obtained by fraudulent voting. A committee of investigation was appointed, and after a great deal of time had been spent in examining witnesses etc., two reports were made to the Senate, one by the Republican members of the committee claiming the election of the four Republicans, and the other by the Democratic members of the committee claiming that the four Democrats had been elected and were entitled to retain their seats. The Lieutenant-Governor of the State who presides over the Senate is "Bob" Kennedy, as he is familiarly called, a violent, self-willed, unreasoning partisan, who don't know anything more about parliamentary law than a Choctaw Indian, or if he does refuses to be bound by it, and "Bob" was determined that the four Republicans should be admitted at all hazards. He intended to effect his purpoce when the matter came before the Senate, by ruling that the four Democrats had no right to vote on the question of admitting any one of their number, although each had received a different majority. In order to block this movement nineteen of the twenty Democratic Senators left Columbus on Wednesday morning of last week and went outside of the State, leaving the remaining Democratic member, Van Cleave, to always be in his seat for the purpose of demanding a call of the Senate if an attempt was made to carry out Kennedy's programme, and defeat it by the call showing the presence of only eighteen Senators, one less than a quorum, and, therefore, under the Constitution incompetent to transact any legislative business. On Saturday last, however, Van Cleave, for some cause, happened to be absent and Kennedy's game was played by admitting the four Republicans, without calling the yeas and nays, thus giving them twenty-one members, a majority of two. It would perhaps have been better if the Democratic members of the Senate had remained in their seats and fought out the matter to the bitter end. An act passed by the two houses, the Senate having been manufactured to order in the way we have stated, is clearly void and of no effect. The veteran Judge Thurman speaking of "Bob" Kennedy's new way of acquiring a majority in the Senate, says: "I hope, if my health is spared, to have a great deal to say on this matter on the stump if I am ever able to go on it again. But this I may say: Whenever the minority of a legislative body can rule the majority and oust legally elected members, it is high time the Constitution of Ohio was changed."

Justice to All.

The efforts of the London newspapers to make capital against Mr. Gladstone's Irish measures out of the Chicago riot would be amusing if they did not do great injustice to a number of American citizens. Nearly every English journal treats the outbreak as one for which the Irish-American portion of our population is responsible, and points to the Anarchists in this country as specimens of the sort of people to whom it is proposed to extend Home Rule.

The Tory London Standard says: "The rioters belong to the motley crowd that have fled from prisons in their own countries to find in America, pending the construction of an Irish Parliament, a secure resting place." The Liberal London Telegraph says that the result of Mr. Gladstone's policy "is seen in the surrender he fain would make to the Irish irreconcilables in America. The Chicago riot has shown us anew what manner of men the supporters of these Irish bills beyond the Atlantic are." The Conservative London Morning Post says that the riot, "though entirely unconnected with Irish politics, may possibly serve to open the eyes of the servile worshippers of Mr. Gladstone to the dangers of making any terms whatever with those who openly resist the law and employ dynamite in order to secure submission to their demands." The London St. James Gazette says: "No wonder the Americans are anxious for the success of the Home-Rule bill, as then there would be another and handier place ready to receive Herr Most and the rest."

What are the facts? In Chicago the three brave police officers who lost their lives in the fight—Deigan, Redden and Shannon—were all Irish by birth or extraction. Out of fifty-one policemen wounded more or less severely, thirty-two have unmistakably Irish names. Among thirty-four rioters and bystanders who are reported as wounded, only seven names bear any evidence of Irish nationality. In a subsequent affray a gallant officer was mortally shot, but succeeded in dangerously wounding and capturing his principal assailant. The officer's name was Michael Madden and that of his prisoner Johann Loeffelhardt,

Let justice be done to all. So far from Ireland being a nest of socialism, a recent investigation showed that there was only one Socialist organization in the country. That was in Dublin, but it had not a single Irish member. Rocheforte, although a good friend of the Irish, was almost driven out of Cork because of his Anarchist sentiments; while the late Louis Veuillot called London the "laboratory of assassins for Europe." And our London contemporaries have probably overlooked the fact that two of the men who incited the Chicago riot and are now held for murder are Chris. Spies and M. Schwab, while the third fiend who gave the signal for the throwing of the dynamite bomb into the police ranks was "Sam Fielden, a Socialistic Englishmaa."

Socialistic Riots in Chicago and Milwaukee.

The bloody riots of Tuesday evening and of yesterday morning in Chicago and Milwaukee afford a striking commentary upon the professions of humanity, benevolence and regard for personal rights that are constantly upon the lips of many Socialistic teachers. In its origin this conflict between the police and a mob of wretches imprudently pretending to represent honest labor was one of the worst attempts to tyrannize over workingmen. Hundreds of workingmen in McCormick's shops and other places were violently assaulted by mobs of ruffians, to whom honest toil is a stranger, and were driven from their peaceful employments in which they were trying to earn a livelihood for themselves and their families. In vain have free institutions been ordained in this country if a despotism like this is to be tolerated.

Before the outbreak of Tuesday night there were abundant evidences of the existence of a lawless spirit in Chicago, and were not that city's government under demagogic influences ample provision would have been made to meet the mob and quell it on the first demonstration of violence. To the want of preparation and to the irresolution of the municipal government a number of brave policemen have been sacrificed. Most of the rioters were Bohemians, Poles and Germans, who have come to this country to put in practice the infamous and bloody doctrines which they dared not preach in their own land. But the responsibility for this Chicago outbreak does not rest wholly with foreign instigators of social anarchy. Parsons and Feilding, two of the mots violent inciters to bloodshed on Tuesday night, are names that indicate Anarchists of indigenous breed. But when blows came the agitators to riot, both native and foreign, lost no time in putting their own carcasses in safety, leaving their poor dupes to the vengeance of the police.

The lessons of this riot cannot be too quickly taken to heart. One is that the workingmen of this country cannot delay in marking the lines that separate their organization from the brigands who make labor agitation the pretext for assaults upon social order and upon the political institutions of the land. The infamous excesses of the Chicago rioters must warn honest and intelligent workingmen of the fate that surely overtakes any movement captained or aided by these bloodthirsty wretches, who have no likeness in modern history except in the Paris Commune. The sympathy of the American people, which is essential to the success of the cause of American workingmen, can be preserved only by purging labor organizations of a ferocious element which recognizes no rule of law but its passions and appetites.—Phila. Record, May 6.

—Advices just received by the steamer Almedia, from Honolulu give an account of a disastrous conflagration which occurred there April 18. The fire destroyed eight squares of property in the Chinese quarter and eight thousand people are homeless. Two lives were lost.

—A few days before William Ashworth, of Oregon, Mo. died, he hid a quantity of gold coin. That was fifteen years ago, and although a careful search was made for the treasure, it could not be found. Last week Mrs. Ashworth emptied an old churn that had stood on the shelf in the smoke house for years. The churn was full of beans, and in the bottom was a tin can, and in the can was an old woollen sock, and in the sock was the long-searched-for gold. It amounted to $712.

Archbishop Gibbons Proclaims Against the Anarchists and Bombthrowers.

BALTIMORE, May 9.—At the dedication of the new church of the Holy Cross in this city, Archbishop Gibbons took advantage of the presence of a large number of foreigners and spoke forcibly on the signs of Anarchism that have recently been developed in America. In his remarks on loyalty to country he said:

"The Government of the United States is a Government for the benefit of the people. Strangers from every part of Europe are welcome to our shores. Like the sun that shines for all, the Government of our country sheds its genial rays upon all classes, without regard to race, nationality or religion. The glorious banner of our country protects alike the humble and the poor, the mighty and the rich. Every man in the United States has an opportunity for earning for himself an honest livelihood, and many have opportunities of acquiring an independent fortune.

"The German population of Baltimore forms an important conservative and influential element, and the same may be said of the German populations throughout the United States, as well as of the other nationalities. They contribute largely to the development of the resources of this country, and daily augment our material prosperity.

THE APOSTLES OF ANARCHY.

"But as the events of the last few days in Chicago have shown, there exists in this country a small but turbulent element, composed of men who boldly preach the gospel of Anarchy, Socialism and Nihilism. These men are land pirates, preying upon the industry, commerce and trade of the country. Their favorite weapon is dynamite. Their mission is to destroy rather than to build up.

"Instead of strengthening the hands of the Government that upholds and protects them, they are bent upon its destruction. Instead of blessing the mother that opens her arms to welcome them, they insult and strike her. If these men had their way, industry and trade would be paralyzed; honest labor would be unrewarded, and gaunt poverty would stalk over the land. They have no conception of true liberty. They would retain for themselves the lion's share of freedom, leaving the others only a morsel. The citizens of the United States enjoy the amplest liberty, but it is a liberty of law, of order and authority. Liberty without law degenerates into license.

NO STANDING ARMY.

"We have no standing army in this country, and I am glad of it, for such armies are a great drain upon the resources of a country and necessarily condemn large numbers of men to a life of forced idleness. The strongest force of a nation lies in the laws of the land, judiciously administered, and these laws are upheld and sustained by a healthy public opinion. The strongest bulwark of a nation is found in the intelligence, virtue and patriotism of its native and adopted citizens. So long as they love their country and cherish her institutions, and are ready to die for her if necessary, we will have nothing to fear from Anarchism, Socialism and Nihilism. Socialism is a foreign plant, a noxious exotic, which grows only in dark places, and withers and decays under the genial sun and atmosphere of the United States."

The Archbishop concluded his remarks by exhorting the congregation to love their country and her institutions, and to do all in their power to promote her best interests; to avoid dangerous, forbidden societies; to beware of demagogues, and not to surrender their liberty to any man or class of men, and at all times to observe the golden maxim of doing unto others as they would have men do unto them.

DANIEL WEBSTER.

Daniel Webster's last speech at Washington has been misquoted. It was delivered from the front door of his residence, next the Unitarian church, to a noisy crowd, who had assembled to rejoice over the nomination of Gen. Scott as the Whig candidate at Baltimore. Mr. Webster, who had expected that he would have received the nomination himself, betrayed no trace of disappointment, and spoke in his deep, melodious voice, "whose every tone was music's own," saying:

"I thank you, fellow-citizens, for this friendly and respectful call. I am very glad to see you. Some of you have been engaged in an arduous public duty at Baltimore, the object of your meeting being the selection of a fit person to be supported for the office of president of the United States. Others of you take an interest in the result of the deliberations of that assembly of Whigs. It so happened that my name, among others, was presented on the occasion; another candidate, however, was preferred. I have only to say, gentlemen, that the convention did, I doubt not, what it thought best, and exercised its discretion in the important matter committed to it. The result has caused me no personal feeling whatever, nor any change of conduct or purpose. What I have been I am, in principle and character; and what I am I hope to continue to be. Circumstances or opponents may triumph over my fortunes, but they will not triumph over my temper or my self-respect.

"Gentlemen, this is a serene and beautiful night. Ten thousand thousand of the lights of heaven illuminate the firmament. They rule the night. A few hours hence their glory will be extinguished.

"'Do stars that glitter in the skies,
And gayly dance before my eyes,
What are ye when the sun shall rise?'

"Gentlemen, there is not one among you who will sleep better to-night than I shall. If I wake I shall learn the hour from the constellations, and I shall rise in the morning, God willing, with the lark; and, though the lark is a better songster than I am, yet he will not leave the dew and the daisies and spring upward to greet the purpling East with a more blithe and jocund spirit than I shall possess. Gentlemen, I again repeat my thanks for this mark of your respect, and commend you to the enjoyment of a quiet and satisfactory repose. May God bless you all."

A Word to Workers.

If your avocations are mentally or physically laborious, if they subject you to exposure in inclement weather, if they confine you to the desk, and are of a nature to involve wear and tear of the brain, and nervous strain, you may occasional require some renovating tonic. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is the article for you, it stimulates the failing energies, invigorates the body and cheers the mind. It enables the system to throw off the debilitating effects of undue fatigue, gives renewed vigor to the organs of digestion, arouses the liver when inactive, which it very often is with people whose pursuits are sedentary, relieves the jaded appetite, and encourages healthful repose. Its ingredients are safe, and its credentials, which consist in the hearty endorsement of persons of every class of society, are most convincing. Admirably is it adapted to the medical wants of workers.

"MY MOTHER is eighty-three years of age, and for years has suffered greatly with rheumatism. In fact she was quite helpless, being unable to move about the house. A lady friend induced her to try Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy. She did so and found almost immediate relief." The power of this medicine to do good extends to all ages and a wide range of complaints. You cannot possibly regret having purchased it. Remember that rheumatism cannot becured externally.

A man named Cox, it is said, was the first to recognize the cassiterite in the gravel washings in the bear Gulch, (M. T.) country. Contemporaneously tin stone was discovered at the Etta mine which was at the time being worked for mica.

I HAVE been troubled with catarrh in the head and throat for the last five years. About three years ago I began the use of Ely's Cream Balm, and from the first application I was relieved. The Narrow Escape

Of a Massachusetts Engineer

Sleep after fatigue and health after disease are two of the sweetest experiences known to man. Fourteen years is a long time to suffer, yet Mr. Peter Lawler, of Dalton, Mass., had led a miserable life for that period through the presence of stone in the bladder. He did obtain temporary relief, but nothing more. Last January he called on Dr. David Kennedy, of Rondout, N. Y., who said, after an examination: "Mr. Lawler, you have stone in the bladder. We will first try DR. DAVID KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY, before risking an operation." A few days later the following letter passed through the Rondout postoffice:

DALTON, MASS., Feb. 6.

DEAR DR. KENNEDY: The day after I came home I passed two gravel stones, and am doing nicely now. PETER LAWLER.

Dr. Kennedy now has the stones at his office, and they are sufficiently formidable to justify the claim that KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY is the leading specific for stone in the bladde. In his letter Mr. Lawler mentions that FAVORITE REMEDY also cured him of rheumatism. The subjoined certificate tells its own story.

OLD BERKSHIRE MILLS,
DALTON, MASS., April 27, 1882.

Mr. Peter Lawler has been a resident of this town for the past seventeen years, and in our employ for fifteen, and in all these years he has been a good and respected citizen of this town and community. He has had same chronic disease to our knowledge most of the time, but now claims to be, and is, in apparent good health.
CHARLES O. BROWN, President.

$1 bottle; six for $5. All druggists.

Dr. David Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy" (of Rondout, N. Y.)—It is not a mere soother, temporarily, of pain, but by its alterative action purifies the blood, restores a healthful condition to the diseased organs, and even dissolves and causes the expulsion of gravel and stone from the kidneys and bladder. The testimony of hundreds who have been cured by it vouches for this.

How's Your Liver?

Is the Oriental salutation, knowing that good health cannot exist without a healthy Liver. When the Liver is torpid the Bowels are sluggish and constipated, the food lies in the stomach undigested, poisoning the blood; frequent headache ensues; a feeling of lassitude, despondency and nervousness indicate how the whole system is deranged. Simmons Liver Regulator has been the means of restoring more people to health and happiness by giving them a healthy Liver than any agency known on earth. It acts with extraordinary power and efficacy.

NEVER BEEN DISAPPOINTED.

As a general family remedy for Dyspepsia, Torpid Liver, Constipation, etc., I hardly ever use anything else, and have never been disappointed in the effect produced; it seems to be almost a perfect cure for all diseases of the Stomach and Bowels.
W. J. MCELROY, Macon, Ga.

Surface Indications

What a miner would very properly term "surface indications" of what is beneath, are the Pimples, Sties, Sore Eyes, Boils, and Cutaneous Eruptions with which people are annoyed in spring and early summer. The effete matter accumulated during the winter months, now makes its presence felt, through Nature's endeavors to expel it from the system. While it remains, it is a poison that festers in the blood and may develop into Scrofula. This condition causes derangement of the digestive and assimilatory organs, with a feeling of enervation, languor, and weariness—often lightly spoken of as "only spring fever." These are evidences that Nature is not able, unaided, to throw off the corrupt atoms which weaken the vital forces. To regain health, Nature must be aided by a thorough blood-purifying medicine; and nothing else is so effective as which is sufficiently powerful to expel from the system even the taint of Hereditary Scrofula.

The medical profession indorse AYER'S SARSAPARILLA, and many attestations of the cures effected by it come from all parts of the world. It is, in the language of the Hon. Francis Jewett, ex-State Senator of Massachusetts and ex-Mayor of Lowell, "the only preparation that does real, lasting good."

Mc-Cauley, of Kaitlauna township, was destroyed by fire Tuesday night of last week together with twenty-nine head of sheep, nine head of horses, nine hundred bushels of wheat, two hundred bushels of oats, one hundred bushels of rye and thirty tons of hay. The origin of the fire is not known. The loss is estimated at $6,250, with an insurance of $1,500.

NOTICE—All persons who owe me money, either by book account, note or otherwise, are hereby notified not to make any payment to E. J. Dunkel, as he is not authorized to receive or receipt for the same, as he is no longer in my employ, having been discharged for cause. J. H. WILSON.

—About half past six on Sunday evening some boys who were passing the stable belonging to the jail saw smoke coming out through the crevices and gave the alarm of fire. A number of citizens who happened to be in close proximity hurried to the stable and found fire blazing up in the manger and in front of one of the horses. A bucket of water put out the flames, and little if any damage was done. How the fire came to be there is a mystery, as Mr. David Horn, who attends the horse, which is a valuable one, does not smoke and had no matches about him, and it is not likely that an ostler would attempt to start a fire at that time in the day when people were likely to be passing. The horse had pulled back as far as his halter would allow him and escaped with no injury of any consequence, his nose only being slightly singed. The timely discovery saved the building, as a few minutes more the fire would have got into the hay and straw, when it would have been impossible to put it out.

—On Monday night about ten o'clock a fire occurred at the Woodvale siding near Johnstown, by which three men, the engineer, fireman and conductor of a freight train were instantly killed. A number of freight cars were empty and some loaded, were standing on the siding and by some means unknown, started down the grade towards the main track and ran onto it when a passenger train eastward bound, and running at the rate of twelve or fifteen miles an hour, came in collision. The engineer, fireman and brakesmen were on the engine, which was turned completely around and thrown on the bank against the bank, while the tender was thrown over the bank on the road bed under which the bodies of Thomas Berry, the engineer, whose residence is at Latrobe, Michael A. Myers, the fireman, and John Conner, the conductor, residents of Derry, were found, their bodies being terribly cut up and mutilated. A number of cars were broken up and the track torn up for some distance. It required a number of hands working all night to get the track and get the road open, the line being delayed several hours.

ADDRESS
1402 ELEVENTH AVENUE,
ALTOONA, PA.

—A notice is inserted by Mr. J. H. Wilson, of Reidsville, Pa., through a spirit of jealousy. I am not doing business or making collections for J. H. Wilson, and that portion of the notice which relates to my being discharged for cause I positively deny, the true reason I quit the employ of Mr. Wilson was because he was owing me, which indebtedness remains unsettled to this date, all of which I am prepared to prove. E. J. DUNKLE.

A Little Boy's Misfortune.

On Sunday morning last, while Mr. H. J. Crouse and the older members of his family were at church, two of his little boys, aged respectively six and eight years, got to playing with a cutting box that was standing in his stable. The balance wheel and crank had been taken off and put away to prevent accidents, but the little fellows got the wheel and put it on and commenced turning it. They hunted up some straw and while the older one turned the younger attempted to put in the straw, when he unfortunately got his right hand into the knives and the three first fingers were cut nearly through in two places. Drs. Jones and Davison were summoned to dress the little fellow's hand, and had some hope of saving all the fingers, but on Tuesday found the middle finger would have to be amputated. The other two will get well, but will always be stiff as the leaders and muscles were cut through.

Hemlock Items.

Saturday next will be pay day at most of the mines. The pay will be the largest ever given in this place.

The miners here sent a car load of provisions worth about $400 to their striking brethren in the Clearfield region, on Monday last.

Mr. Augustine McConnell, formerly of Wilmore but now of this place, was severely injured by a fall of coal while at work in Piper & Co's. mines one day last week. His left foot was badly crushed, but fortunately no bones were broken.

A May party for the benefit of the Catholic church here will be held on Saturday, May 22nd. A plea-ant time is anticipated.

Emerald Beneficial Association, Branch No. 113, will hold a festival in Union Hall, Monday evening, May 17th. Everything will be done to make it pleasant for those who attend, and all are cordially invited.

Col. Dick White Post, G. A. R., of Lilly, will turn out on Memorial Day with the Lilly Cornet Band. C.

St. Augustine Notes.

This is the month of flowers, and is beautiful growing weather.

Elmer Wharton, whose illness I mentioned in a recent letter, is, we are glad to hear, slowly convalescing.

I forgot to mention in my recent letter that the young ladie's sodality of this congregation have purchased a beautiful banner for their society, costing ninety dollars. They realized two hundred and twenty-five dollars and fifty cents on the gold watch they had up for chances. A lucky young Miss of this congregation drew the watch.

Rev. Michael Ward preached a beautiful and appropriate sermon on Sunday. He is an eloquent speaker.

James M. Walters, of Johnstown, stopped a short time in this place recently. His visit was pertaining to the election.

We also noticed the presence of John E. Strayer, candidate for Assembly, of the same place.

On Sunday Celestine J. Blair, for Register and Recorder, paid our town a call.

The bans of marriage was pronounced in the church here on Sunday between John Nagle, of this congregation, and Ella Sheehan, of St. Michael's church, Loretto.

Some of our temperance men are busily engaged in the erection of their new hall. Every man should give a helping hand as it is badly needed for many purposes.

John Bender and daughter Maud, of the Cambria House, Ebensburg, paid our town and relatives in the country a short visit on last Sunday week. Their many friends were glad to meet them.

Ashdale is building rapidly.

Mr. F. Burgoon, of Clearfield township, purchased the store of F. Shoff, of Ashdale. Mr. Shoff will still continue with his other store in Clearfield township.

Mr. Thos. Dumphey is building a post-office at his hotel at Swire's Mill. Mr. D. and daughter will take the whole charge of his store in this place, and his son John will attend the post-office at the mill. V.

Canon Farrar,s New Book.

A few weeks ago, when Canon Farrar was in this country, tens of thousands of people paid as much as one dollar each to hear a single lecture delivered by him, and were well pleased with what they got for their money. Several of the most important of those lectures and addresses with other papers are now published by John B. Alden, of New York, and can now be had in a very handsome cloth-bound volume, for the price of 40 cents. Some of the lectures are also published separately in his Elzevir Library, in which form the lecture on Dante sells for 3 cents; on Temperance, 2 cents; on Ideals of Nations, 2 cents; Thoughts on America, 3 cents. Court Proclamation.

Whereas the Hon. Robert L. Johnston, President of the Court of Common Pleas of the 47th judicial district consisting of the county of Cambria, and the Hon. John Flanigan and the Hon. Josep Masters, Associate Judges of Cambria county, having issued their precept bearing date the 7th day of September, 1885, to me directed for holding a court of Oyer and Terminer, General Jail Delivery and Quarter Sessions of the Peace in Ebensburg for the county of Cambria and to commence on the first Monday of June being the 7th day of June, 1886, and to continue two weeks.

—"Most of these hair preparations don't work," writes Mr. J. S. Burdick, of St. Louis, "but Parkers Hair Balsam is an honorable exception. My hair was thin and prematurely gray. The Balsam made it brown again and as soft as in my boyhood."

—No other preparation so concentrates and combines blood-purifying, vitalizing, and invigorating qualities as Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Quality should be considered when making comparisons.

ONE NIGHT awhile ago John Layton, who runs the main line hose, coming from Boston, came on my engine sick as death. He was so feverish and nervous he almost cried. Cheer up John," says I, "and I'll fix you in a jiffy, and I gave him a good dose of Dr. Kennedy's "Favorite Remedy." He went to bed. Two days after I saw him looking strong as a butcher. "That's the stuff for a railroad man," he said."—Daniel Fitts, Engineer Old Colony Railroad.

A WOULD-BE LITERARY LIGHT.

The following correspondence is now given to the press for the first time with the consent of the parties:—

"WILLIAM NYE, Esq.:—

"DEAR SIR.—I am a young man, twenty years of age, with fair education and a strong desire to succeed. I have done some writing for the press, having written up a very nice article on progressive euchre, which was a great success, and published in our home paper. But it was not copied so much in other papers as I would liked to have saw it, and I take my pen in hand at this time to write and ask you what there is in the article enclosed that prevents its being copied abroad all over our broad land. I write just as I hope you would feel perfectly free to write me at any time. I think that writers ought to aid each other. Yours, with kind regards. ADELBERT L. TEWET.

"P.O. box 203."

"I have carefully read and pondered over the dissertation on progressive euchre which you send me, Adelbert and I cannot see why it should not be ravenously seized and copied by the press of the broad land referred to in your letter. If you have time, perhaps it would be well enough to go to the leading journalists of our country and ask them what they mean by it. You might write till your vertebræ fell out of your clothes on the floor, and it would not do half so much good as a personal conference with the editors of America. First prepare your article, then go personally to the editors of the country and call them ons by one out into the hall in a current of cold air and explain the article to them. In that way you will form pleasant acquaintances and get solid with our leading journalists.

"Seriously, Adelbert, I would suggest that you make a bold dash for success by writing things that other people are not writing, thinking and saying things that other people are not saying. You will say that this advice is easier to give than to take, and I agree with you. But the tendency of the age is to wear the same style of collar and coat and hat that every other man wears and to talk and write like other men; and, to be frank with you, Adelbert, I think it is an infernal shame. If you will look carefully about you you will see that the preacher who is talking mostly to dusty pew cushions is also the preacher who is thinking the thoughts of other men. He is 'up-ending' the barrel of sermons annually, and they were made in the first place from the sermons of a man who also 'up-ended' his barrel annually. Go where the preacher is talking to full houses and you will discover that his sermons are full of humanity and originality. They are not written in a library by a man with interchangeable ideas, an automaste cog-wheel thinker, but they are prepared by a man who earnestly and honestly studies the great aching heart of humanity and, full of sincerity, originality and old fashioned Christianity, appeals to your better happiness.

"How is it with our poetry? As a fellow traveller and seasick tourist across life's tempestuous tide, I ask you, Adelbert, who is writing the poetry that will live? Is it the man who is sawing out and sandpapering stanzas of the same general dimensions as some other poets, in which he breaths the fact that he loved a tall, well behaved, accomplished girl, sixteen hands high, who did not require his love? "Ah, no. He is not the poet whose term cotta effusive will stand in the century, wearing a laurel wreath and a lumpy brow. Show me the poet who is intimate with nature and studies the little joys and sorrows of the poor, who smells the clover and writes about live, healthy people with ideas and appetites. He is my poet.

"I apologize for speaking so earnestly, Adelbert, but I saw by your letter that you felt kindly toward me and rather invited an expression of opinion on my part. So I have written more freely, perhaps, than I otherwise would. We are both writers. Measurably so at least. You write on progressive euchre, and I write on anything that I can get hold of. In the language of the late Lydia E. Pinkham, 'yours for health,' BILL NYE."—[Boston Globe.

Not Keeping Up The Pace.

Dr. Lyman Abbott, writing of city population, says: "Ninety-one per cent. of the population of Chicago was composed of foreigners and foreigners' children. The proportion of Cincinnati was sixty-two per cent.; that of New York fifty per cent. The foreign population has been acquired more quickly than the necessary means to educate and assimilate it. In the rural districts the average number of churches to the population was about as one to every 500 people; in the cities the proportion varied from one for every 2,000 of the population to one for every 2,500, or even 5,000. The proportion in New York has been as follows: 1840, one church to every 8,000 of the population; 1846, about the same average, 1850, one to every 2,000; 1860, one to every 2,304; 1870, one to every 2,604; 1880, one to every 2,608. In 1850 the average in Chicago was one to every 1,000 of the inhabitants, and at the present time there was but one church for every 6,500 of the population. The church, one of the conserving influences of society, had, therefore, not kept pace with the increase of population in this country."

The Blue Point Oyster.

The original Blue Point oyster was first discovered in Long Island waters nearly a century ago. At that time there was a portion of the Great South bay, opposite Blue Point, that was covered with blue mud and oysters were not supposed to exist in this muddy ground. The discovery was accidentally made by a fisherman who was dredging for an anchor that he had lost. The shells of the oysters were very dark and the oyster itself fat and luscious. It was not long before the discovery became known and men flocked to the ground by hundreds. A few of the baymen made fortunes, and it was nothing unusual for any man to take as high as 200 bushels in a single day. At the time there was a ready market for them at fifty cents per bushel. The beds naturally could not stand the continual drain and finally became exhausted. The oysters now caught off Patchogue and called Blue Points do not resemble the original Blue Points and are inferior. They are of a light brown color and an entirely different shape, and do not grow naturally where found, but are cultivated.

Odds and Ends of Wool.

Odds and ends of wool may be utilized with pretty effect for afghans. The bits of wool are knotted together according to fancy, the ends being left about an inch in length. They are crocheted together with a coarse needle in plain stitch. The knots must be kept on one side, so the longer pieces of wool should be used for the return row for the under side. If, however, all the bits are small it is a simple matter to draw the knots through to the upper side. The ends of the wool have a mossy look, and the varied colors have a cheerful effect.

Whisky or Whiskey.

I am inclined to think that the trade spelling of this world varies somewhat with the nationality of the particular member. I have observed that the scotch firms seem to adopt the form whisky, Irish firms the form whiskey. In a London periodical devoted to subjects connected with the liquor trade generally, entitled Drinks, of which the February number is now before me, I find the spelling whisky used, moreover, quite incidentally throughout a short article in such a way as to indicate that it is the ordinary orthography of that journal. On the whole, therefore, I think that the evidence points to whisky as being both the modern Scottish orthography and that most generally in use except in Ireland.—[Notes and Queries.

Arizona Journalism.

An Arizona paper of recent date has the following paragraph: "If our paper doesn't seem as bright as usual this week, we beg our readers to overlook the fact. Some durn fool came in on Monday, while we were over at Al Blodgetts, and spilled all our mucilage. Now we can do without ink, but the Ripsnorter must have mucilage if it is to hold its place in the community. We have a right smart bunch of brains, but we don't pretend to cover four sides of a paper at once. P. S.—We have bought a new bottle of mucilage, and warn the ornery cuss who spilled the last bottle that he will have to pay for it or get a licking."
